

A dram fine result for Inver House

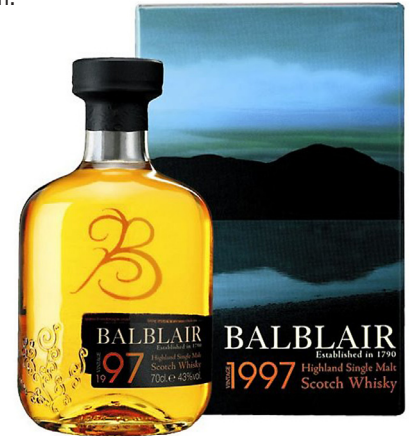

◆ Inver House Distillers has fought off strong competition to be named as International Distiller of the Year at a glittering ceremony in London. The Airdrie-based firm, which produces the Balblair and Old Pulteney single malts, reached the final of the “Icons of Whisky” event by beating off competition in Scotland from Glenmorangie, Bowmore and William Grant & Sons, before claiming whisky’s highest accolade over seven other global finalists. Karen Walker, marketing manager of Karen Walker toasts success with Inver House’s Dalblair malt.

Inver House, said:
“We are very proud of the work that we have achieved over the last year and are devoted to the success of whisky world-wide”.

Scotland on Sunday, March 2008

Inver House is Distiller of the Year

◆ Inver House Distillers has been declared International Distiller of the Year at the influential industry-voted “Icons of Whisky” ceremony in London. The Airdrie-based company beat off competition from Japan, Ireland, Canada, India, Sweden and the USA.

Inver House, who last year globally re-launched Balblair Single Malt as a super-premium “vintage”, first beat off competition in Scotland from Glenmorangie, Bowmore and William Grant, before claiming whisky’s highest accolade over seven other global finalists.

Hankey-Bannister, one the company’s bestselling blend brands, also received recognition by winning “Best Scotch Blended Whisky”. Announced on the eve of the Whisky Live! show, the awards were created to celebrate the greatest whiskies in the world.

Scotsman, March 2008

